Learning to Teach in an Era of Privatization—Christopher A. Lubienski 2017-09-19 Education policymakers often demonstrate surprisingly little awareness of how popular reforms impact teaching and teacher education. In this book, well-regarded scholars help readers develop a more robust understanding of the nature of teacher preparation and development systems as well as the implications of popular policies, practices, and ideologies that have taken root domestically and internationally. Contributions include Dorian Boyles, Anthony Cody, Kerry Kretchmar, Carmen Montecinos, Beth Sondel, and Christopher Tienken. "This book will help readers consider the possibilities of learning to teach in an era of privatization in ways that can either limit or enlarge the ways people create and express themselves. He describes the range of legal and policy choices that confront this.

Christianity, Book-Burning and Censorship in Late Antiquity—Dirk Rohmann 2016-07-25 It is estimated that after a small fraction, less than 1 per cent, of ancient literature has survived to the present day. The role of Christian authorities in the active suppression and destruction of books in Late Antiquity has received surprisingly little sustained consideration by academics. An approach that presents evidence for the role played by Christian authorities is needed, and this book aims to fill that gap. The book is divided into three parts. Part I, "Theological and cultural context", examines the origins of the practice of book burning and its implications for understanding the nature and extent of censorship in the late classical and early Byzantine world. Part II, "Theological and cultural context", examines the origins of the practice of book burning and its implications for understanding the nature and extent of censorship in the late classical and early Byzantine world. Part II, the health systems of 19 countries are each examined in their own chapter, that carefully explores the complex of geography and culture, the history of its health system, followed by a detailed evaluation of cost, quality, access and innovation.

The Wealth of Nations—Yochai Benkler 2006-01-01 Describes how patterns of information, knowledge, and communication are now changing because of the Internet and the networks it supports. The new media can either limit or expand the ways that people create and express themselves. He describes the range of legal and policy choices that confront this.

Case studies ranging from the innovations that make the iPhone so "smart" to the current developments in clean technology reveal the reality, whereby the private sector only invests after the entrepreneurial State has made the bold, high-risk investments.

Some authors have recently suggested that the rise of smartification is the result of the digitization of various aspects of society, including the environment, homes, and workplaces. The result is an increasing reliance on technology to perform tasks that were previously done manually. This has led to a decrease in the number of jobs that require human labor, as well as a shift in the types of jobs that are available.

The volume demonstrates how the Holy Spirit has become an adversary to the recognized presence of witches, demons, and sorcerers as manifestations of evil. We learn how this is articulated in spiritual warfare, in crusades, and in healing or witch-killing raids. The contributors highlight what happens to phenomenist-led people addressed as locally specific witchcraft or necromancy whose re-embodiment within the universalist Pentecostal demystology, vocabulary, and confrontational methodology.
